Replication: Political Analysis adheres to a simple replication standard. Unless otherwise noted, appropriate replication materials, including, at a minimum, sufficient data and computer code to allow any reader to reproduce the results of the article, will be permanently posted on the Political Analysis web site (<http://polmeth.calpoly.edu/pa.html>). Authors are also encouraged to post more complete versions of their papers, and other ancillary materials, on that site.

The Society for Political Methodology, a section of the American Political Science Association, is the sponsoring organization for Political Analysis. Political Analysis is concerned with the entire range of interests and problems centering upon how political inquiry can be conducted: measurement, estimation and specification and theory development. Any manuscript dealing with this broad set of interests is appropriate for submission to Political Analysis. Science implies method, and we cannot have a science of politics without more attention to methodological issues.

Authors interested in submitting to Political Analysis should consult the instructions for authors available on the Political Analysis web site (<http://polmeth.calpoly.edu/pa.html>).

Electronic submissions to Political Analysis are preferred. Two files (one suitable for blind refereeing) should be sent to pa@ucsd.edu along with the following information:
